

Memorialization

After Cremation

“From a psychological perspective, people need to face the reality of death to get through the grieving process. Research has shown that people who choose direct cremation rather than funeral or graveside service have a greater need for counseling to help them through their grieving process after the cremation is done,” said Sherry Williams, president and co-founder of New Leaf Resources, a national provider of grief support materials and programs.

The Lexington Crematory, located on the community memorial grounds, offers many memorialization options to help families choose what is right for them. Families will discover a wide selection of urns and a beautiful garden setting to memorialize a loved one including:

- Inurnment in The Lexington Mausoleum, columbarium or private family mausoleum
- Burial in a family lot
- Enclosure in a niche bench, boulder or statue
- The Lexington Cemetery Scattering Garden

Mark Durbin
Assistant General Manager, The Lexington Cemetery
National Director, Cremation Association of North America

“A permanent location on cemetery grounds for cremated remains allows family and friends, along with future generations, a place where they may visit and commemorate the life of an individual.”

The
Lexington Cemetery
Established 1849

Grounds Open 8am-5pm Daily
833 West Main St. • 255-5522

www.lexcem.org